Aviator Portfolios™
Quarterly Fund Update

What happened in financial markets during Q3 2020*

Stock markets hit record highs, before a September pullback
- For a second straight quarter, financial markets continued to climb back from the lows in March. By late August, North American stock indexes were at record levels. September, however, brought a sell-off in technology stocks that saw U.S. tech giants Apple, Amazon, Facebook, Google, Microsoft and Netflix lose over US$1 trillion in combined market capitalization – through the month’s first three trading sessions alone.
- Volatility was fuelled by investor uncertainty on several factors related to the U.S. economy, including: progress towards a COVID-19 vaccine; trade conflicts with China; and signs that recovery may be stalling, with an anticipated financial-aid package being held up in Congress. With the added political uncertainty leading into the U.S. presidential election, investors had plenty of reasons to pause and consider the sustainability of the five-month stock-market rally, as well as the valuations of the companies behind its surge.
- Despite the September sell-off, where stock markets gave back some of the gains made over the previous five months, it was a positive quarter overall.

Central banks held interest rates near zero, but investors wanted more stimulus for the U.S. economy
- In September, the Bank of Canada announced that it was holding its benchmark rate at 0.25% and confirmed its commitment to keeping it there until the economy stabilizes. The bank said that it will also continue to buy government bonds at its current pace and maintain extraordinary monetary-policy stimulus to help pull Canada out of the downturn – the deepest downturn since the Great Depression.
- Similarly, the U.S. Federal Reserve announced that its benchmark short-term rate will remain unchanged at 0.25%, adding that it will likely stay there for at least three years. What seemed to surprise investors – adding fuel to September’s pullback in the markets – was the lack of fresh stimulus plans. Instead, the central bank merely reaffirmed its commitment to using its full range of tools to support economic recovery.

Investors called for further government spending to boost economic recovery
- With the U.S. presidential election approaching, partisan politics prohibited lawmakers from reaching a consensus on additional financial aid for struggling U.S. economic recovery. In testimony before Congress, U.S. Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell lent his voice to those urging further support from the government: “The path forward will depend on keeping the virus under control, and on policy actions taken at all levels of government.” Noting that a recovery is underway, he added this: “both employment and overall economic activity, however, remain well below their pre-pandemic levels, and the path ahead continues to be highly uncertain.”
- In Canada, the federal government pledged to do “whatever it takes” to support the economy. This was following a much-anticipated throne speech that opened a new session of Parliament in September. In his nationally televised address that followed, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau listed longer-term policy plans, including a national childcare program, pharmacare, improving senior care, and increased spending on housing and the environment. While the plan was light on details, the government signalled its intention to expand on its already sizable debt.

How did my Aviator Portfolios™ fund perform during Q3 2020?

Q3 2020 saw all three portfolios extend positive gains for a second consecutive quarter, building on the momentum that had picked up between April and June (Q2). Generally, equities outperformed bonds in Q3, and as a result, most allocations to fixed income funds detracted from performance relative to the overall portfolios. Below is a breakdown of our portfolio funds, their construction, and their performance in the third quarter.

Note: Rates of return for each portfolio fund are provided on an after-fees (net) basis. Given that fees are only applied at the portfolio level, all references to underlying fund performance are before fees are considered (gross).

Co-operators Aviator™ Income Plus Portfolio: Low-risk portfolio

Designed to achieve interest income, preservation and moderate growth of capital, with low levels of volatility.

Driven by preferred-share equities, the portfolio generated positive performance in Q3. Though the portfolio’s heavy weighting towards fixed income detracted from returns, strong performance from the Co-operators Preferred Share Equity Fund, along with the Co-operators Global Equity Fund and Co-operators Bissett Canadian Equity Fund, added value relative to their respective benchmarks (before fees).

Co-operators Aviator™ Diversified Portfolio: Low- to moderate-risk portfolio

Designed to achieve both interest income and capital growth, with modest levels of volatility.

In Q3, the largest contributing factor to the portfolio’s positive return was its heavy weighting towards preferred shares and global equities. The allocation to the Co-operators Templeton Emerging Markets Fund also positively contributed to the overall portfolio, offsetting weaker performance from the portfolio’s allocations to fixed income.

Key take-aways
In the third quarter of 2020, prior to the September sell-off, financial markets not only continued to rebound from the March lows, but returned to a record-setting pace – a pace that was last seen in the months leading up to the COVID-19 outbreak.

Both the speed of the recovery and the return of volatility (in September) were unexpected, given the pandemic’s impact on businesses, markets and the world’s economies. And it’s important to remember that, despite a positive Q3 overall, we’re still entrenched in an unprecedented time for global economies and financial markets.
